e come to Barnard for many reasons, most of which involve the innumerable aspects of New York City.

We come for the unique educational advantages offered by this metropolitan college — renowned professors, extensive libraries and timely studies—all supplemented by the theaters, museums and scientific laboratories of this city.

e select our fundamental interests from the variety of opportunities Barnard and New York afford. To study or to play, to be alone in a crowd or to be part of that crowd, to look beyond ourselves or to remain egocentric: these are some of the problems we face.

We are influenced in our decisions by the advice, friendship and example of the people we meet. Barnard provides the common ground to which these people come, enriching their heritage by the exchange of ideas and cultures. Both in college and out, we discover those outlets for self-expression in education and in social activities which help contribute to the formation of our individual patterns of life.

...the unique educational advantages

New Faces

On our return to Barnard in the fall of '53 we were delighted to see a "new" Barnard. Although the exterior was the same . . . the dignified iron gates in front of Barnard Hall, the stone benches along the paths, the ivy on the columns . . . the interior had been modernized. Three gleaming brass doors replaced the impractical single door at the entrance of Milbank.

Barnard Hall in Spring

The atrocious friezes along the stairways, no longer regarded as "fine art," had been deftly removed. Classroom walls were brightened by cheerful yellows, blues and mauves, fluorescent lighting and even green blackboards! Seminar rooms were equipped with attractive, modern tables and chairs, and—at last—enough ashtrays for the chain smokers.

To meet the demands of day students, lounges were furnished with functional, comfortable chairs and sofas. The outstanding accomplishment in this department was the transformation of the dingy Barnard Hall cafeteria into the sunny James Room. Gay linoleum, blonde wood tables beautiful chairs upholstered in eye-catching colors and a radio-phonograph console were part of the miracle. Now Barnard commuters have a cheery spot to meet their fellow students and to bring their men friends.

The dorm students were not ignored in this paint and polish program. The first floor of the residence halls was refurbished and refurnished. Beau parlors became more "homey" with the fitting of pale green venetian blinds to blend with the newly-decorated rooms.

Faculty were also included in the renovating plans. The fourth floor of Barnard Hall was converted to a house the English department. The dark crevices of Milbank's basement were brightened and new offices created to accomodate the growing staff.

their minds and souls as well. Thus the word "foreign" may disappear from the vocabularies of men and all knowledge will be shared in common. Such a unity may dwarf barriers which many people today consider insuperable. It is the duty and responsibility of every national or international body, of every educational institution, and of every individual to establish contact with differing minds and to broaden the scope of vision of all people. This is the only foundation on which world peace can stand firm.

Ballad of the Dogfish

Dedicated to Zoology 2

The dogfish sat in the formaline jar
And chuckled aloud in glee;
"I'll have high jinks with these Barnard girls Before I am done," quoth he.

"For I am a giddy elasmobranch (Though bereft of my caudal fin),
And to plague the ladies who cut me dead
Could scarcely be deemed a sin."

So while his helpless victims drew
His "systems," one by one,
He waxed more strong in his deadly might
With the passing of each day's sun.

And their cheeks grew pale as bit by bit
They carved at the dogfish grim,
For carving had no repressive effect
On what there was left of him.

The weary days dragged slowly by—
With forks that class ate bread;
If they took the windward side of a friend
That friend, instant, fled,

Till naught was left of the dogfish bold
Save a blithe, expansive smile,
And a brain, the source of some score of nerves
And full of exceeding guile.

But the smile waxed broad as his victims walked Shunned, outcast, down the street;
And at last, as the small boy swept him up,
He murmured, "Revenge is sweet."

Field Trips

Professor Milton, holding the student's paper in the palm of his left hand, slapped it with the back of his right, placed it on his desk and swung around in his old, squeaky swivel chair.

"Obviously the entire class misunderstood the assignment," Dr. Milton growled as he tried to banish from his mind's eye the thirteen other reports which his young assistant, Mr. Horton, held shakily in his hand. Dr. Milton's chair complained loudly as he sat up suddenly and pointed to the discarded report on his desk. "Just what was the topic supposed to be?"

"Twentieth Century Philosophy, sir."

"Quite liberal in her interpretation, eh, Mr. Horton?"

"Quite, sir," replied the young teacher. "Well sir, I suppose I should destroy the others."

Squawk: "You mean the students?"

"Oh no, sir—the papers. They all seem to be quite 'liberal'."

"Have a seat, Mr. Horton. Now then, you hadn't been with us too long when you suggested this field trip to the City of New York for the girls of our freshman class. At first I couldn't quite picture such an outing as an integral part of our college curriculum. But, when you suggested we supplement the trip with written reports, your idea became academically sound."

"Thank you, sir."

"I'm not finished, thank you! As I was saying, your idea was very sound until you came up with these reports. Mr. Horton, when a student titles her paper, Histology and Histological Methods, I expect a treatise on organic tissue and not on City Prison."

"City Prison, Dr. Milton?"

"Cells, Mr. Horton!"

"Oh yes, of course; I'd forgotten that one. But here's one that comes fairly close, Doctor Milton, the one on Arthur Murray and American Social Classes.

"And this girl spent all day at Carnegie Hall. It got so late that she almost missed the bus back to campus, so she didn't have too much time to spend on her report. As a matter of fact, it's the most concise of them all. She chose to write on Musical Expression of the Ideals of Western Culture."

"Just what did she say, Mr. Horton?"

"Solid, Doctor Milton, solid!"

"Now, wait a minute. This looks as if it might be a pretty good one: Theory of Functions of Complex Variables."

"You won't like that one, either, Doctor Milton, although it is fashioned after Kinsey—something about the human male and elevator operators at the Empire State!"

"There was another like that wasn't there something about Nuclear Physics in New York City?"

"Oh, yes sir. That discussed the nature of Adams". Also, someone went to Ellis Island to study Foreign Relations, but she couldn't find any. Dr. Milton, I suppose you should know that at the end of the day we went as a group to Yonkers Raceway—"

"Probability Theory? I can see we accomplished very little with your field trip, Mr. Horton. And as your supervisor I find that I cannot rate this experiment as highly successful. It seems to me we can find little use for such reports. You see, in the college curriculum, humor has no—"

The phone rang.

"Yes this is Doctor Milton. Certainly, I would be glad to speak at the Governor's Dinner for Educators. The topic is what? Would you repeat that please? Hmm-m . . . I see . . . Thank you. Goodbye.

Now Mr. Horton, where was I? Oh, yes. As I was saying, there is no room for humor in the college curriculum. However (pause-squeak), if I may keep these reports for just a few days, I may be able to find points which may help me to judge this experiment in a more favorable light. That is all, Mr. Horton."

On his way out, Mr. Horton stopped at Dr. Milton's secretary's desk and cautiously inquired, "If I'm not being too nosy, Miss Hazel, just what is Doctor Milton going to speak about at the Governor's Dinner?"

"Oh, I don't believe it would do any harm to tell you, Mr. Horton. The Governor's secretary just phoned and gave him the topic: Field Trips Can Be Fun. Why Mr. Horton, whatever can be so hilarious?"

Drama Workshop

Brinckerhoff Theatre, remodeled and modernized in the all-college renovation program, has been renamed as well. In honor of Professor Minor Latham, Professor of the Drama at Barnard for 34 years, the theater has become the Minor Latham Drama Workshop.

The Workshop is a logical outgrowth of Barnard's diversified Drama courses in which is used the workshop method of teaching—a tradition established by Miss Latham. It is indeed fitting that the new workshop should be named in honor of the "first lady of the Barnard theater." The internal structure of the old playhouse was reversed to afford good vision from all sections of the orchestra and balcony, while at the same time allowing for wing and backstage space to accomodate elaborate equipment.

The official opening of the Workshop took place October 14, 1954, with a reception and one-act play presented by the Associate Alumnae of Barnard, and Wigs and Cues. A month later the Workshop group's first full-length production, Strindberg's There Are Crimes and Crimes, was presented. To become the undergraduate drama center of the campus community is the goal of the Workshop, and judging from the number and variety of plays thus far produced, that goal is in sight.

Vocational Conference.

Barnard students took a day off from regular classes on December 1, 1954 to attend the college's second vocational conference. On the theme of "Working with a Liberal Arts Degree", the all-day session stressed the relationship of the liberal arts to a wide variety of professional and non-professional careers.

Keynoting the conference was Dr. Margaret Mead B'23, Associate Curator of the American Museum of Natural History and Adjunct Professor of Anthropology at Columbia University. After Miss Mead's talk, the students attended two of a variety of panel discussions designed to include many different careers. Sessions dealt with working with people, language, politics, and the physical and biological sciences, as well as working overseas, in the business world, and in the field of performing arts.

The conference gave students a much clearer insight into the value of a liberal arts education and its practicality in the professional world.

Barnard's location in the Metropolitan area is perhaps most often considered in the light of the advantages available to the student. However, the college also performs a definite service to the University community and even, in a wider sense, to the American community. This is amply illustrated by Term Drive, WKCR radio station, various professional clubs, and individual girls whose extra-curricular activities include work in church Sunday Schools and settlement houses in Manhattan.

"THE GONDOLIERS"

Seventy-five blocks separate the Minor Latham Drama Workshop at 120th Street and Broadway from the heart of the New York Theater District in the mid-forties west of the main stem. To Barnard students this gap is quickly bridged by a twenty minute sojourn on the I. R. T. express. However, stage productions either on or off Broadway provide only one segment of the cultural possibilities of the New York vicinity. The Metropolitan, City Center, Brooklyn Academy of Music, even jazz sessions in Greenwich Village all offer both standards for aspiring artists as well as pure entertainment to those who would rather watch than participate.

Nothing but the best for Kate Moore '56, who stands hopefully scrutinizing The Caine Mutiny billboard. It may be a standing-room ticket . . . Well, the shoes look comfortable at any rate.

Architecturally speaking the churches surrounding Barnard College provide a varied field for Fine Arts research papers. The churches more than fulfill their main function . . . that of providing a religious backdrop for the university life of a student here at Morningside Heights.

a la mode

Our college careers began four years ago when we came to Barnard as wide-eyed freshmen. We came with all the prerequisites for a happy and successful venture: camel's hair coat, white bucks, bobby sox, yellow slicker, strapless formal, and oh yes, a pad and pencil with which to take some notes.

As our first year came to an end, our attire underwent slight changes. In admiration for the K-9s of America, we cropped our locks in the poodle cut. We sophs attended classes in pedal pushers and sweaters. The need for more than a pad and pencil was recognized; now standard supplies for class were a ream of paper attached to a clip board, a ballpoint pen, and several weighty books, among them very likely The Complete Works of William Shakespeare.

Then too, there were transformations in our "crazy mixed-up" speech. In fact, one professor began his lecture with the following bit of American wit:

"Two bebop individuals, experiencing pangs of hunger, entered a restaurant in order to partake of a morsel of nourishment. The trend of the conversation ran along these lines—

Bebopper A: I'd like some apple

sir.

Bebopper B: Man, I'll have some pie tool"

Sophomore year passed, and so did pedal pushers—passed the knee, that is. We entered our Junior year wearing Bermuda shorts, a man-tailored shirt, and knee-length argyles, hand knit of course. The camel's hair coat and the once-white bucks were still with us. With the Condensations of Shakespeare's Plays in one hand and in the other a tote bag containing every item indispensable to the well-equipped college woman—knitting needles, wool, cigarettes and cards
—the Barnard Junior wended her way across campus. International relations were promoted briefly this year by the Italian haircut, but Audrey Hepburn soon brought us back across the Atlantic.

Now, as super-sophisticated seniors, we look back to those immature carefree days of our youth, and smile indulgently at the passing fancies we entertained. The worries of today weigh heavily on our minds—Dior or dungarees, bridge or canasta, mambo or samba?

Mrs. Florence Bridges, Director of Student Mail since 1948, receives, assorts and distributes mail for the English department and Barnard students, answers phone calls, types messages, and holds cash boxes for safe-keeping in her tiny cubicle opening on Jake. At her busy corner the messages she handles average an incredible one thousand a day. "Everything runs smoothly, though," asserts Mrs. Bridges, "because the girls and I work on a co-operative basis."

"It takes me about six to eight weeks to recognize all the names and associate them with the girls," she proudly states. When their names change, Mrs. Bridges is the first to know, for "they want to see their married names up on the board."

Just as Mrs. Bridges was saying, "Nothing unusual ever happens here," the phone rang. "Student Mail . . . Wait a minute, now . . . Let me write that down . . . You say a girl left her leotard in your taxi? . . . Yes, I'll tell her." Mrs. Bridges replaced the receiver and laughingly admitted, "I do get some peculiar calls at times."

"A girl must have confidence in her advisor," is the firm belief of Mrs. Louise Stabenau, Advisor to the Class of 1956. Her immeasurable capacity to listen sympathetically to the problems of students inspires their confidence in her, for Mrs. Stabenau feels that the need of the students to talk must be exploited.

The best description of her duties as counselor comes from Mrs. Stabenau herself. "Occasionally I have to dampen the enthusiasm of some students, especially transfers and freshmen who are eager to overload their programs. In the middle of the term I usually have to do a bit of reconciling and give girls permission to drop courses in order to ease their schedules. Students also come to me with more personal problems," she remarked. "Family difficulties often result when girls begin to be independent and assert their personalities. Their parents do not realize that the rebellion is not frivolous but indicates a real need for experimentation.

"Sometimes students drop in just to say hello," Mrs. Stabenau continued, "and while we talk, I discover problems. Of course, I know there are many shy girls who don't come and it is often they who have the greatest needs. I much prefer to have a girl come to me on her own initiative than to call her in myself," she explained, "because the girl who ventures in without having been summoned is more liable to reveal her real difficulties."

This delicacy of approach is a rare gift and one which has always been appreciated in Mrs. Stabenau by others, and especially by the Class of '56. The gratitude her class feels toward Mrs. Stabenau is difficult to express, but as one junior put it, "She's an angel!"

Miss Helen Carlson, Advisor to the Class of 1957

As Advisor to the Class of 1957, Miss Helen Carlson gives her time generously to all those who seek her help. We first met Miss Carlson when, as bewildered freshmen, we approached her with our carefully planned programs before the beginning of school. She pointed out that perhaps History 3 would fit our individual needs better than History 9, or that it might be wiser to wait until Sophomore year to start a new language. Sometimes we accepted her suggestions with mixed emotions, forgetting that she knew the consequences of a disorganized and overburdened freshman program better than we. Now, we are able to appreciate her foresight and are grateful for her advice.

We met Miss Carlson socially at the Freshman Teas where we were given the opportunity to become better acquainted with our classmates and with our advisor. She would pass from group to group, matching names with faces and putting us at ease through her interest in our opinions and ambitions.

Now that we are sophomores, we have passed that "trying time." Problems still present themselves, however, and Miss Carlson is always available to give us the helpful advice we need. As one sophomore remarked, "She makes you feel that yours is the only problem, and it consoles you to know that someone is taking a constructive interest in your schoolwork." This is an advisor's primary task and if two hundred girls are any judge, Miss Carlson has filled the bill perfectly.

Mrs. Lucille Altschul, Advisor to the Class of 1958

Arranging freshman schedules, talking over problems, and helping students adjust are some of the many responsibilities which have fallen during the past year on the capable shoulders of Mrs. Lucille Altschul, Advisor to the Class of 1958.

Ever since Mrs. Altschul was introduced at the President's Luncheon given during Freshman Orientation, she has been hard at work arranging programs to suit the needs of each girl under her supervision and answering the many questions they posed about Barnard and about college life in general.

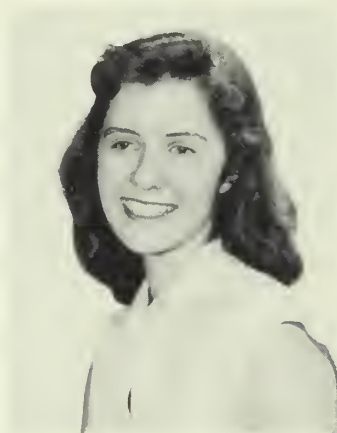

In order to get acquainted with the freshmen, Mrs. Altschul gave a series of teas in the Deanery to which she invited in small groups all members of the class. These gatherings were very successful and were a great help in promoting friendship among the students and good relations between the class and its advisor.

The class of '58 has benefited tremendously from Mrs. Altschul's guidance, and will continue to look to her in the years to come for the same understanding counsel that they have received from her as freshmen.

"Egg salad and tomato on white? Coming right up!" Mrs. Helen Geist, the uncontested ruler of Barnard's Student Annex, dispenses friendly smiles and cheery greetings as well as cokes and coffee to annex habitues and casual comers alike. Her sunny disposition has enlivened this cozy room for five years, winning for her innumerable friends from among Barnard students and faculty.

Like so many of the girls who frequent this busy corner of the Barnard campus, Mrs. Geist loves to talk. She willingly engages anyone who succumbs to her invitation to chat in lengthy, fascinating discussions on men, politics, philosophy, or the weather. That this verbosity doesn't hinder her efficiency is evidenced by the speed with which she despatches the overwhelming hordes of hungry girls that beat against the doors at noontime. Two big lunch-time attractions of the annex are Mrs. Geist's "Dagwood"-sized sandwiches and giant scoops of ice cream.

Sleep-drugged commuters, inveterate bridge players and harried professors alike make it a practice to meet in the annex. Here, where the twin tonics of coffee and friendship are dispensed, the dynamic personality of the queen behind the counter makes itself felt and appreciated. Even those of us who know Mrs. Geist only slightly feel much the better for it.

We may spend hours in philosophy classes listening to the preachings of the "ancients" and the "moderns" without absorbing an outlook on life more astute than the one we can glean from Mrs. Ellen Corbett, the Brooks and Barnard Hall elevator operator. This philosophy? Well, Ellen sums it up in one word, patience—patience when facing the rushing throngs constantly late for class, patience with the agitated "buzzer pushers," and patience as a harried dorm student pants into the elevator only to discover that she must return for some essential item. Disturbing as these aspects of the job would be to most of us, Ellen attributes them all to "youthful exuberance" and merely smiles quietly.

The unique moments she shares with each successive bevy of undergrads seem to compensate for any unmentioned annoyances. "It's really fun, for me," she says, "to watch the girls open their mail." Often she catches a glimpse of the look of delight when a "special" letter arrives, or hears the sigh of relief that welcomes the check from home. Perhaps, however, her most prized moments are the seconds of suspense that accompany an impatient belle on her way to an equally impatient date.

Indeed, Ellen herself might be mistaken for one of the students were it not for her gray uniform, for she stands only shoulder high. Improbable as it seems, she is nevertheless the mother of a grown daughter. This fact casts a bit of light upon Ellen's sympathetic attitude toward students, for she claims, "Since I raised a daughter in New York City, it's easy for me to understand the way city girls think."

Mr. Jens Vadstrup

"Life isn't the same around Columbia in the summer time when the Barnard girls are away," admits Mr. Jens Vadstrup, cashier of the Columbia University Bookstore. Mr. Vadstrup is plagued continually during the school year by forgetful misses who neglect to sign checks, try to draw on long-since depleted accounts, or fill in two different sums on the same check.

All this would cause most people to tear out their hair, but not so Mr. Vadstrup, who combines philosophy with counting and doling out money. Here's a man who's an optimist and really likes people. He always has a cheery hello and a wide smile for his regular "customers" and often takes time out from his duties to chat a bit with them.

A native of Denmark, Mr. Vadstrup finds the climate of New York City much like that of his homeland, and so appreciates the rainy as well as the sunny days. Although the only window of his small office faces a blank wall, Mr. Vadstrup nevertheless claims he receives a great deal of sunshine from the smiling faces of the Barnard girls he sees through the bars of the cashier's window.

From the vantage point of Mr. Frank Coughlin, night watchman for the Barnard residence halls, the life of a dorm student would appear to be an endless series of catastrophies. Since Mr. Coughlin is the official "keeper of the keys" for any dorm resident who arrives at the front door of Brooks after 1:31 a. m., he has witnessed many a last minute, albeit futile, race with the clock, and heard many a pathetic tale of woe. "Often, though," he relates, "the latecomers merely mutter, 'flat tire' or, 'that . . . subway!' as they whisk by me."

Actually Mr. Coughlin's duties begin at midnight when he politely escorts any remaining males and their dates from the living rooms and beau parlors. At 1:25 a. m. he blinks the porch lights in an attempt to alleviate as much as possible that final mass stampede to the door. "For about ten minutes," he admits, "things are pretty hectic around the front desk."

Nor are Mr. Coughlin's glimpses of catastrophic moments limited to the crucial 1:30 deadline. Coping with small scale fires and floods is another part of his duties. Each year he is accosted with such phrases as "Come quickly, there are two inches of water around my bed!" or "Smoke is positively billowing down our hall!" On closer surveillance the major flood generally turns out to be a minor case of faulty plumbing, while the raging conflagration stems from a single wastepaper basket that has been drafted as a temporary ashtray. Another answer to the cry "fire" is often a neglected iron that has been abandoned to scorch its way through the ironing board and that indispensable black sheath dress while a forgetful miss is busily engrossed in communication via Alexander Graham Bell's invaluable invention.

"Actually," Mr. Coughlin concludes, "they are all very nice girls, but," he added chuckling, "sometimes the Columbia freshmen need to be forcibly introduced to the rules and regulations of the dorms—witness the annual panty raids!"

Mr. and Mrs. Albert A. Schiller

Well-known to all who buy school supplies or stationery needs at 2957 Broadway (popularly known as Schiller's) is Mr. Albert A. Schiller, owner and genial clerk of this store which former Dean Virginia C. Gildersleeve once called a 'veritable institution' and which has been located at this site since 1911. Mr. Schiller has memories of this neighborhood which seem almost unbelievable to us today. He recalls the extra blocks he walked to his home at 123rd Street and Amsterdam Avenue in order to circumvent the fear-provoking goat which roamed a nearby chicken farm. Playing baseball at the present site of Union Theological Seminary was a favorite youthful pastime. 116th Street was then only a dirt road at the end of which the Columbia Crew practised daily on the Hudson. Brooks and Milbank Halls were the only Barnard buildings in existence.

In 1931, the present Mr. Schiller inherited ownership of the establishment from his father. He himself had worked there for many years while attending school. He feels it's really good to be in this area, serving Barnard students for so many years, and where grandchildren of alumnae are now becoming fairly regular customers. Quoting both Mr. and Mrs. Schiller, "Being here is a way of remaining perpetually young, but with the arrival of each new freshman class, we begin to have a very strange feeling. They seem to be younger each year—or perhaps it's because we continue to grow older."
